

The Cheng Du Living Water Garden

Learn about China's Water Garden

What is the Living Water Garden?

- The Living Water Garden is in Cheng Du, China, on the Fu-Nan River. It is used as a symbol of how a river can be cleaned up while turning it into art.

What was the inspiration?

- The Fu-Nan river is one of the most polluted rivers in the world. The project was an attempt to inspire others to clean up the river.

What Happens at the Cheng Du Water Garden?

- The Cheng Du water garden uses a system of constructed wetlands, flow forms, and art to illustrate natural methods for cleaning water.

How Does it Work?

- Water from the river is fed into man made ponds containing different native plants that pull toxins out of the water.

- This garden provides an opportunity for people to witness the cleaning of their river, and ways to interact with the water.
